1) INTRODUCTION & BACKGROUND

| | |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| Contract type: | Consultancy and Services |
| Duration of assignment: | From signing of Contract |

Background of Project & Assignment:

In late 2021, WWF-Pakistan received funding to develop an AI based camera trap to prevent humansnow leopard conflict, along with developing a monitoring tool which would provide real-time data with minimal human involvement. In collaboration with the Technology for People's Initiative (TPI), housed at the Lahore University of Management Sciences (LUMS), WWF-Pakistan has developed a solar powered AI camera trap which is able to detect and notify about the presence of an animal within a minute of detection, both through an SMS notification, and a locally developed online dashboard.

In the first phase of the pilot, the team sought to test and pilot the functionality of the AI Camera trap in the remote snow leopard habitats of the Karakoram, Pamir landscape, both in the summer and winter months. This first phase allowed us to identify gaps and problems in its field functionality, and test solutions to fix the same. This included i) improving the camera's processing time from detection to notification, which went from 12 minutes to less than 1 minute; ii) due to the low quality of the camera used in the earlier iterations of the AI camera trap, the AI wasn't able to properly distinguish between humans and animals, hence a higher resolution camera was installed; and iii) during the winter deployment, it was observed that as the batteries installed were not able to withstand cold temperatures, the team designed and developed new batteries that would be able to do so.
